“What did you do in school today?” is a common question that parents ask their children. The Teaching Children Mathematics Editorial Panel would like to ask a similar question of our readers:

What did you do in math class today?

We value the diverse viewpoints and experiences of classroom teachers. Add your unique contribution to the mix. Do you have a story to tell about a classroom situation that taught you a great deal? Share it so that others can learn.

Find all you need to know—about word limits, where and how to include figures and photographs, submitting a feature article or a department manuscript, citing references, and more—at www.nctm.org/journalsubmissions.